Utah Film Location Company Spurs Film Production Despite Economic Downturn

SALT LAKE CITY UTAH November 14, 2010

As the Sundance Film Festival inches closer, Utah will become the focal point of thousands of Film Makers who hope to leave their mark on the entertainment industry despite all the economic uncertainty. One Utah based company views the economic turbulence as an opportunity to expand. Utah Film Locations provides independent film makers and motion picture studios access to unique film locations that include office buildings, mansions, houses, parking lots, warehouses, and restaurants that are vacant but staged with furniture to provide the ideal setting for any film production and with rotating inventory, Utah Film Locations has something for everyone looking to make Utah home to their production.

Recently at the Annual Utah Film Industry Gala, director of the Utah Film Commission, Marshall Moore praised Utah Film Locations mission. "I want to applaud Utah Film Locations, for doing something to enlarge our infrastructure at a time when a lot of people are pulling back. They stepped up and created a business that will help strengthen and build our industry, from a film commission perspective that can only help our efforts."

Utah Film Locations also gives new film and commercial makers the opportunity to use locations that normally only big budget Hollywood productions can afford. "Utah has so many talented filmmakers who, because of a lack of funding, never get the chance to shine." Mike Baird owner of Utah Film Locations said.

The success of Utah Film Locations strategy is apparent by the number of bookings it has received in recent months. Commercials, photo shoots, events and film productions have all made their way to Utah Film Locations who have found their niche by combining the elements of Hollywood with the hospitality of Utah.
